

SPECIAL CABLES FROM OLD WORLD CAPITALS

FOREIGN PAGE

NEWS GATHERED FROM
ALL PARTS OF GLOBES. ELECTION AIDS
PLOT OF UNIONISTS

Amazing Scheme to "Ditch"
Lloyd-George Is Denounced as Revolutionary.

MONEY TO BUY VOTES

Cash Will Be Spent Like Water
in Battle of Ballots in England.

By PHILLIP EVERETT.

Special Cable to The Tribune.
LONDON, Nov. 30.—The rise of getting the present liberal government to resign as a result of the defeat it suffered on a snap division on an important amendment to the home rule bill having proved a complete failure, the crafty Unionists are hatching another plot to get into office.

Indirectly this new strategical scheme is due to the recent triumph of the democratic party in the United States, or the English tariff reformers are now living in a constant dread lest America should throw overboard high protection before England has taken steps to protect herself from the changes such action would entail. The plans of the Unionists are:

Home rule is to be passed by the Lords this session. Once it is passed, the Unionists will demand a general election and will force it by every means in their power, even by defeating the budget of 1913 if necessary. Owing to the Bowles decision, next year's budget must come on early in the session. The Unionist hope is that the general election will bring this back to power, especially as, if the home rule bill were law, the reputation of Ireland would be reduced from 103 to 42, even before the Irish parliament can meet.

With a majority in the commons the Unionists would at once proceed to amend the home rule bill by reducing it to a "legislative council" measure, and could deprive that body of any power over the police.

A tariff reform budget would be introduced with special reference to Ireland's need and every effort would be made to fill the "hollow" any further display of Nationalist feeling, person would be avoided at any cost, unless the criminal conditions of Ireland justified it.

Such is the bold plot which Mr. Lloyd-George and his colleagues are said to be hatching. It is the most daring scheme that a great political party could contemplate, for it would mean risking Ireland and the empire on a general election. But the tariff reform wing members are ready for anything; even the risk of home rule, and it is they who have hatched this revolutionary scheme, which will hardly commend itself to the more sober and old-fashioned politicians. As a means of "ditching" Lloyd-George, it is unparalleled in its audacity.

The $5000 dinner may have helped those who have planned this bold stroke, for money will be needed and money will be spent like water this winter for the general election in May or June next.

King's Jockey Adopts Waif of Streets and Makes Him an Apprentice.

MATCH BOY WILL BE ROYAL RIDER

King's Jockey Adopts Waif of Streets and Makes Him an Apprentice.

Special Cable to The Tribune.

LONDON, Nov. 30.—The following story of how a little match boy was taken out of the streets of Liverpool by Herbert Jones, the king's jockey, transformed into a happy apprentice at Epsom, and how the match boy of the king should appear not only to racegoers, but to their critics.

Jones did not intend that the news should be made public, but it came out anyhow, and on being challenged about it, Jones said:

"I had three letters from the boy and did not answer them. Then he wrote a fourth time, and I thought, 'This fellow, whoever he is, must be a rascal.' So I telegraphed to him to meet me at Liverpool. I saw him, and found that he was a ragged little fellow selling matches, with his clothes tied together by safety pins."

"He is 17, but small. I took him into a shop and decorated him out from top to toe, including gloves, and it was worth a fiver to see his face when he got his new clothes on."

PLAYS IN CAGE
TO FOIL ASSASSIN

Black Hand Threat Causes Russian Violinist to Take Extraordinary Precautions.

Special Cable to The Tribune.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 30.—The "black hand" sent Mr. Mititzky, the celebrated Russian violinist, a letter threatening him with death if he did not forward $250. Mr. Mititzky is so terror-stricken that he has armed himself with two Browning pistols, and only appears on the platform in a solid iron and steel cage, with only a few loopholes through which the sound of his violin can be heard.

DOLLAR QUEENS OF PARIS
DAUDET CROWNS YANKEES

MRS. WILLIAM B. LEEDS.

French Metropolis Always
Haunt of Exiled Royal,
Says Literature.

Special Cable to The Tribune.

PARIS, Nov. 30.—Leon Daudet, well known as a man of letters, who married a granddaughter of Victor Hugo, and is himself the son of the great novelist, Alphonse Daudet, has made the discovery that Paris has become more and more the haunts of kings in exile. But they are very different kings from those about whom his father wrote in his book, "Kings in Exile."

In those days the ex-king of Hanover, who lived in the house now occupied by Harris Phelps, the now exiled Baltimore lawyer, the ex-king of Serbia, ex-Queen Isabella of Spain, ex-Emperor Don Pedro of Brazil, and the ex-queen of the two Sicilies all made Paris their headquarters. Leon Daudet points out that queens and kings of his father's day are now replaced by American queens, and also some American queens. For instance, there are William Ellis Corey of Pittsburgh, king of steel; James Hazen Hyde, king of insurance; Sellers McKee, king of glass; Abe Hummel, king of the New York type of criminal lawyers; Augustus Eddy, king of venerable painters; Eugene Higgins, king of yachtmen. Then there is Berry Wall, former king of dukes, who is known on the race courses as the man with the collar.

As for queens, the list is even longer. There are Mrs. Archibald White of Cincinnati, queen of coal gas and coke; Mrs. Moench, the ambitious queen of radigators; Mrs. Norman Hutchinson, queen of beauty; Mrs. Gilpin Harjes, queen of coal; Mrs. Clinch Smith of New York, queen of music; Mrs. William B. Leeds, queen of royal entertainers; and Mrs. Ramon Borden, princess of condensed milk, who was brought to Paris recently by Mrs. William White, the queen of chewing gum. Daudet insists that the millions possessed by these persons give them more actual sovereign powers than the sometimes empty titles gave the earlier visiting royalties.

WHALEERS RESCUE
WRECK SURVIVORS

Special Cable to The Tribune.

PUNTA ARENAS, CHIL. Nov. 30.—Stories of a gallant rescue by whale fishers of the British steamship Gravia, which was lost on the Bally Road, Falkland Islands, on November 12. The passengers declare that but for the whaleers probably all would have been drowned. The cargo and thousands of mail bags were lost.

"HOLY RUSSIA" IS IN HANDS OF A FANATIC

Glaring Election Frauds Will Give Premiership to Head of Synod.

NIHILISTS ARE PLEASED

Reactionaries Dominate the
Duma and Are Expected to Cause Revolution.

By FREDERICK PALMER.

Special Cable to The Tribune.
BERLIN, Nov. 30.—The result of the Russian elections have surprised nobody. The fourth duma will be even more reactionary than the third. More than one-third of its members belong to the extreme wing of reaction, creators of the Holy Synod, who in connection with the Nationalists will constitute the majority. The so-called

Reactionaries Dominate the
Duma and Are Expected to Cause Revolution.

As Empress Eugenie once said, when the Franco-Prussian war was declared in 1870, these people now say:

"The war in the Balkans is our war. It is the great dress rehearsal of regenerated and rejuvenated France crushing overconfident Germany."

This sentiment becomes more and more evident. In the cafes along the boulevards, where people usually are sitting quietly and sipping their "Perrier" or "mazagran," political discussions are now carried on in loud and excited voices; the whole map of Europe is reconstructed as Napoleon the Great reconstructed it in his mind. Chauvinism reigns supreme. For is not indeed this war being won by French tactics and French guns? Did not King Peter of Serbia himself study the art of war at the famous military academy of St. Cyr and does not the principal hero of the gigantic drama, King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, have French blood in his veins?

Unnumerable are the stories which are told on the boulevards about this once despised, long-nosed lieutenant, the surprisingly talented scion of the royal house of Bourbon.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

FRENCH TAKE CREDIT OF ALLIES' TRIUMPHS

King Peter of Serbia Was Graduated From Famous
War School of France.

TURK IS WELL HATED

Boulevardiers and Peasants
Rejoice at Downfall of the Sultan's Forces.

By GEORGES DUFRESNE.

Special Cable to The Tribune.

PARIS, Nov. 30.—It is easy to understand why a people with the temperament of the French are wildly enthusiastic over the events that have taken place in the Balkans, where the methods and material of war of the arch enemy have been weighed and found wanting. And in spite of all formal, more or less official, assurances that the peace-loving and industrious people of France have not lost their heads, it cannot be denied that even the blasé boulevardiers of Paris and far more, of course, the warm-hearted patriots in all parts of the country have been deeply impressed by the success of the Balkan states.

As Empress Eugenie once said, when the Franco-Prussian war was declared in 1870, these people now say:

"The war in the Balkans is our war. It is the great dress rehearsal of regenerated and rejuvenated France crushing overconfident Germany."

This sentiment becomes more and more evident. In the cafes along the boulevards, where people usually are sitting quietly and sipping their "Perrier" or "mazagran," political discussions are now carried on in loud and excited voices; the whole map of Europe is reconstructed as Napoleon the Great reconstructed it in his mind. Chauvinism reigns supreme. For is not indeed this war being won by French tactics and French guns? Did not King Peter of Serbia himself study the art of war at the famous military academy of St. Cyr and does not the principal hero of the gigantic drama, King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, have French blood in his veins?

Unnumerable are the stories which are told on the boulevards about this once despised, long-nosed lieutenant, the surprisingly talented scion of the royal house of Bourbon.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

SNAIL EATERS DUPED
BY TRICKY VENDORS

Sellers, Too, Chagrined to Find "Shameless Ones"
Appropriating Trademark.

NO GUARANTY ON SHELL

Only Gourmets Can Tell Exact
Location Where "Petit Gris" Is Born.

Special Cable to The Tribune.

PARIS, Nov. 30.—Of the shameless ones who clothed the common "petit gris" in the habit of the noble "Vigneron de Bourgogne" and sent him to adorn gourmets' tables, of the nameless horror of the gourmets that what they ate was all other than it seemed, of the noble syndicate that arose and declared its intent to make war against the shameless ones, and give to the gourmets the snails they deserved and paid for, I have already written.

Harken further to the saga of the snail.

When the good news of impending deliverance from nameless doubts and fears was told to the gourmets they folded white hands and offered prayers for the success of the syndicate of the snail. And they noted on their tablets the legend which was to be inscribed on the banner of their champions. It chanced that upon this legend lighted also the eye of the perfidious, even those who clad the common "petit gris" in the habit of the noble "Vigneron de Bourgogne," and in their breasts a dark design was born. There arose certain among their number who went to the Prefecture, and a "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"Because," said the shameless ones, "we tend the snail on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

"What do you here?" said the "fonctionnaire."

"We tend the snail," they said, "on the fair slopes of France, and furnish it forth, a dish for kings' tables, let a name be given to us and to those others, which shall say that thus and thus we do." And they named the name of the legend which the new syndicate, the gourmets' eight champions, had declared abroad that it would—presently inscribe on its banners.

"Yes," said the "fonctionnaire," "assembled the name shall be yours."

And they paid the fee.

Then the champions, the gourmets, protectors of the eaters of the snail, drew near one day to the Prefecture. And the "fonctionnaire" received them.

SMILES INNOCENTLY
IN DECOLLETE GOWN

Truly Fashionable Woman in Mayfair Cultivates "Triangular" Smiler.

DIAMONDS IN TEETH

Receipt for Manufacturing the Three-Cornered Smirk Is Easy to Follow.

Special Cable to The Tribune.

LONDON, Nov. 30.—The vagaries of fashion know no limit among the devotees who worship the Goddess of Style in Mayfair.

No woman is suitably equipped now for any big function unless she has contorted her face into what is known as the "triangular smile." This expression is considered absolutely essential when wearing draped gowns, demanded by Victorian fashions, which are the rage of the moment.

The "triangular smile" is supposed to represent simplicity and innocence. It is formed by lifting the center part of the upper lip to form the apex of the triangle, the lower lip then representing the base. The upper teeth are thereby revealed, and some women are wearing tiny rosebud diamonds in their teeth, arranged so as to form a dazzling smile.

To facilitate speedy perfection of the smile some women are trying to tilt their noses by wearing under the nostrils a band which is fastened to the top of the head, thus drawing up the nose and top lip. This, of course, is not exhibited outside of their boudoirs.

To accentuate the effect, the upper lip is painted a deeper red in the middle than the rest of the lips.

As for the society ladies' attempt to revive the fashion of side-whiskers, it has required only a few weeks to show that this style is as dead as the dodo. The American fashion of a clean-shaven face is now almost the general rule, and there is not the slightest possibility of its being superseded by the fads of the feeble few.

The West-end hairdressers assert that Englishmen take as much care now of their faces as women do, and spend hours daily in being manicured and generally beautified. It is the custom with many of them to have their faces and hands massaged every morning, after which they are shampooed and perfumed. In fact, the only advantage which the fair sex have over them in the matter of cultivating a young look, is in penciling the eyebrows and rouging the lips.

The king has given special permission for Miss Iris to be married in the Chapel Royal, St. James' palace, the scene of so many historical royal weddings.

LONDON, Nov. 30.—The fact that the queen has sent a wedding gift to Miss Iris FitzGeorge, bride of Mr. Robert Balfour, is extremely interesting in view of the young lady's relationship to the royal family. Her family history is one of the romances of British royalty. The late Duke of Cambridge married the actress Miss Fairbrother, but the alliance was inoperative under the act of 1772. The duke defied the act, and descendants are therefore prevented from being princes and princesses. Miss Iris FitzGeorge, her sister Daphne and her brother, George, are children of the duke's eldest son, Colonel George FitzGeorge, who died a few years ago, and the ladies are therefore British princesses by blood though not in name.

The king has given special permission for Miss Iris to be married in the Chapel Royal, St. James' palace, the scene of so many historical royal weddings.

LONDON, Nov. 30.—The fact that the queen has sent a wedding gift to Miss Iris FitzGeorge, bride of Mr. Robert Balfour, is extremely interesting in view of the young lady's relationship to the royal family. Her family history is one of the romances of British royalty. The late Duke of Cambridge married the actress Miss Fairbrother, but the alliance was inoperative under the act of 1772. The duke defied the act, and descendants are therefore prevented from being princes and princesses. Miss Iris FitzGeorge, her sister Daphne and her brother, George, are children of the duke's eldest son, Colonel George FitzGeorge, who died a few years ago, and the ladies are therefore British princesses by blood though not in name.

The king has given special permission for Miss Iris to be married in the Chapel Royal, St. James' palace, the scene of so many historical royal weddings.

LONDON, Nov. 30.—The fact that the queen has sent a wedding gift to Miss Iris FitzGeorge, bride of Mr. Robert Balfour, is extremely interesting in view of the young lady's relationship to the royal family. Her family history is one of the romances of British royalty. The late Duke of Cambridge married the actress Miss Fairbrother, but the alliance was inoperative under the act of 1772. The duke defied the act, and descendants are therefore prevented from being princes and princesses. Miss Iris FitzGeorge, her sister Daphne and her brother, George, are children of the duke's eldest son, Colonel George FitzGeorge, who died a few years ago, and the ladies are therefore British princesses by blood though not in name.

The king has given special permission for Miss Iris to be married in the Chapel Royal, St. James' palace, the scene of so many historical royal weddings.

LONDON, Nov. 30.—The fact that the queen has sent a wedding gift to Miss Iris FitzGeorge, bride of Mr. Robert Balfour, is extremely interesting in view of the young lady's relationship to the royal family. Her family history is one of the romances of British royalty. The late Duke of Cambridge married the actress Miss Fairbrother, but the alliance was inoperative under the act of 1772. The duke defied the act, and descendants are therefore prevented from being princes and princesses. Miss Iris FitzGeorge, her sister Daphne and her brother, George, are children of the duke's eldest son, Colonel George FitzGeorge, who died a few years ago, and the ladies are therefore British princesses by blood though not in name.

The king has given special permission for Miss Iris to be married in the Chapel Royal, St. James' palace, the scene of so many historical royal weddings.

LONDON, Nov. 30.—The fact that the queen has sent a wedding gift to Miss Iris FitzGeorge, bride of Mr. Robert Balfour, is extremely interesting in view of the young lady's relationship to the royal family. Her family history is one of the romances of British royalty. The late Duke of Cambridge married the actress Miss Fairbrother, but the alliance was inoperative under the act of 1772. The duke defied the act, and descendants are therefore prevented from being princes and princesses. Miss Iris FitzGeorge, her sister Daphne and her brother, George, are children of the duke's eldest son, Colonel George FitzGeorge, who died a few years ago, and the ladies are therefore British princesses by blood though not in name.

The king has given special permission for Miss Iris to be married in the Chapel Royal, St. James' palace, the scene of so many historical royal weddings.

LONDON, Nov. 30.—The fact that the queen has sent a wedding gift to Miss Iris FitzGeorge,